- January 9, 2019 Mechanics of Construction: Mediation of Construction Disputes
Mediation can be a cost-effective process for resolving construction disputes, and in many contracts, it is prerequisite to binding dispute resolution, including the AIA Document A201 - General Conditions to the Contract For Construction. Because the final contract becomes the law between the parties, it is essential that each party become familiar with all terms, especially how disputes will be resolved, before a problem arises.

The Florida Supreme Court issued its opinion Thursday, November 3 in the much-anticipated case of Bartram v. U.S. Bank. At issue was the question of whether a previous involuntarily dismissed foreclosure action triggered application of the statute of limitations to prevent a subsequent foreclosure based on payment defaults occurring after the dismissal of the earlier foreclosure action.
